Language Education

The School of Global Studies offers a World Language Program whereby GLS students earn 40 or more credits for Japanese language education. Our program is designed for students who have never learned Japanese or are at a beginner's level to understand Japanese linguistic structures and learn useful daily expressions and basic phrases step by step. By the time they graduate, they will be able to comprehend short articles written for native Japanese speakers and to communicate orally according to various situations and types of people. Specifically, the goal is to reach Level N2 or N1 in the Japanese-Language Proficiency Test. The students who have passed Level N1 in the Japanese-Language Proficiency Test are eligible to take 「College-level Japanese Language I A ~ IV B」, 「Japanese Language I A ~ II D」, 「Japanese Affairs I A ~ III B」 or 「Business Japanese I ~ II」. These courses are originally designed for international students other than GLS students.

Graduation Research

Senior students work with one faculty member on a capstone project which allows them to integrate what they have learned of a particular culture or discipline into a broader global framework. The final project may take the form of a traditional thesis, or an alternative project format, mutually agreed upon with the faculty advisor.

Chukyo University's School of Global Studies offers four years of challenge to help you face the challenges of the 21st century. Languages and cultures, the worlds of politics, economics, literature, philosophy and more — all yours to discover.

Preparing Leaders for The 21st Century

Chukyo University has opened the School of Global Studies to nurture human resources who will be active on a global stage. The Global Liberal Studies major has been created as part of this program. Here is an opportunity for international students and returnees to meet and learn together. The educational goal of the GLS major is to foster human resources who can find practical solutions to issues shared around the world. This requires language skills for negotiation and deliberations, as well as an understanding of various cultures, analytical skills, and ethics, from a global perspective. Through the wide-ranging studies in the GLS major, we hope to refine the students' abilities so they can show leadership that will create a better world. Japan's role in Asia and in the world will become more important. This is why it is significant to study in Japan. I hope to apply the connections I have created at international conferences and my experience as a professor to support the growth of each student. Tell us your dreams, and take your first step toward that dream at GLS.

John Esposito
Professor

Learning and experiences that connect the world

In the GLS major curriculum, I am in charge of Environmental Issues, World Civilization, and Media. I hope that through their studies, students will learn that the world is connected. I want them to understand that the issues each country faces are actually connected, and cannot be solved just on their own. Students from various countries will gather at the GLS major. It is a truly international place. You will realize that there are many ways of thinking through exchanges with your classmates, Japanese students in other majors and faculties, and with people of the community. You will have the chance to learn about Japan during your studies here. You will also have opportunities to travel throughout Japan, and learn about local cultures and differences in values. You will have many valuable experiences during your studies in Japan, just as I have had. Come to GLS to gain an international education and sense. We welcome you here at GLS.

Global Liberal Studies

Global Liberal Studies (GLS) is an interdisciplinary major that helps students acquire the broad skills and knowledge of the social sciences and humanities needed to become independent thinkers, lifelong learners, and responsible global citizens in a rapidly changing world. The major is fully English-medium instruction (EMI), in which all classes are content-based and taught by professors from various academic fields within the humanities and social sciences. Thus students must already have English as their first or second language as a foundation for successful study in the program.

GLS major focuses on developing a well-rounded awareness and mastery of the great works, thinkers, and intellectual traditions that have helped to shape the globalized world we live in today. Students can choose from a wide range of classes offered in English from the different concentrations within the School of Global Studies in order to develop a holistic knowledge of the world's cultures, philosophies, politics, societies, and religions through different historical periods.

GLS promotes small seminar-size classes in which students will have ample time for discussion and writing. In addition, we promote an active experiential approach to learning, in which students must visit actual sites (museums, theatres, historical landmarks) related to their study, and participate in internships or volunteer work in order to deepen their understanding and gain practical problem-solving abilities which will be useful in their future careers.

★ Other classes from different fields of study are available, depending on your area of interest.
